Leadership occurs in relationship to someone or something. Behind all leadership, there is something at stake. On a personal level leadership is about how we lead our own lives. At the organizational level, leadership encourages others toward top performance and unity of purpose.

In our leadership practice with horses, the horse reflects the importance of embodiment. The horse requires us to be 100% present, embody what we care about, and be accountable for the performance of the team. They reflect back to us, moment by moment how effectively, or not we are leading them.

Today's leaders are tasked with integrating people and strategies for the sake of achieving sustainability and performance in challenging business environments. Effective leaders inevitably find themselves in situations that they have not been in before; Situations in which they might not have all of the answers, but they have to make decisions and take action anyway. Leaders who are effective naturally succeed to their point of limitation by leveraging their natural born talents. Arrival at new destination requires the need to learn new ways of thinking, being and development of new skills.

All activities with the horses are facilitated on the ground in a safe and supportive environment. There is no horseback riding included in this program.
